"BOSS" TWEED.

The Play Now Enacting on Blackwell's Island.

A MOCKERY OF IMPRISONMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HEBALD :-For somewhat more than a year there has been performance going on in the Pententiary on Black well's Island which has a kind of likeness to a Chinese play on account of its duration. Also it bears a resemblance to that kind of a bybrid frama which would be made by the conjunction of a very mild, uneventiul comedy, and a pantomime of one act, in which the harlequin has simply to change, with a stroke of his lath, a handsomelynviting. One of the actors in this strange performance, it hardly need be said, is, and since the play was mangurated has been, Mr. William M. Tweed, the former "Boss" of the politicians of this city. He plays a Protean part. In the pantoimic act be is the harlequin, and, as he strikes, aguratively, the side of his room with his lath, it speedily emptied of fine furniture and he himseil is divested of citizens' clothing and garbed in prison apparet. In the comedy portion of the play Mr. Tweed assumes the part of a superfluous ospital orderly, who lolls at ease in his room, very near the truth some officials connected with the Pentientiary reluted it, and with a great show of indignation, for the officials of the Department of Charities and Correction are modest and do and stage managers. But now it is possible for me to give them all the reputation they deserve for their acting, and it is the purpose of this letter to tell exactly how they performed and what were the incidents of the play in which Mr. Tweed was leading man and they a flue support. The opportunity is given me by a change in the cast of the play, caused by the retirement of Mr. Thomas Burke from the part of "the working orderly," and his arrival in this city, from which he was absent nine months.

And now to the story of the play. As bas been more than a year, and, within several periods during that time, its incidents have recurred. It ill satisfy the purposes of this communication to take the last period, occurring within a month and half, through which Mr. Burke played the part of "the orderly." During that time the incidents were more defined than ever before. This was somewhat strange, because most of the perform-ers were new to their parts. Commissioners places of Messrs. Laimbeer, Stern and Bowen, and Warden Fox had superseded Warden Lis-

"But, Mr. Burke, did not Mr. Tweed perform the duties of a hospital orderly?"

"No, sir; I did as the work that he was said to do. I woul! write up he books and bring them to him and then he'd say to me, 'That's very good, Tommy,' he was always pleasant to me except that he made me run around an awill lot answering his oeh. He appeared to me to be always ringing that bel. It sounded in the bospital when he pulled it in his room. He didn't have much to say to the men in the hospital, but he was kind to them and used to send 'em inquors and such tangs when he thought they was real such and not summin.' A good many of the men would be shammin'; and tour's blame 'em, for he's pretty bad working in them quarries."

Noticing that Mr. Burke had struck a vein of casularry and seemed disposed to looks it to its end, interrupted him, saying:—'The keepers, of course, treated Mr. Tweed with great consideration?'

tion y'.

He answered, with evident wonder at the simplicity of the remark:—
"Why, of c-time they did. He always carried plenty of mency with lams, and they told me often to do the best I could for the old man."
"How does the Boss stand imprisonment?"
"Pretty weil. He's got a little thin, but he was always prime. He don't expect to get through with his case until it goes into the Court of Appeals, and he don't expect anything from the bupreme Court General, or whateyer it is called."

"You said, Mr. Berke, a short time ago, something about the way in which it was kept concealed that Mr. Tweed had so many privileges in prison. Now, how was it done?"

"Will, they wore all in the job. The Commissioners all knew how he was treated. They could go through the Pentitenitary wacenever they wanted to, and conid see all about the old man.' You remember when the Grand Jury came up to the island last month? It was on a saturday—the lefth, I think. Tweed knew they were coming, and so did Warden Fox and all the other officers. On that morning "the old man" came to me, and, says he. 'Tommy, them Grand Jurymen are coming here to-day, and they're going to kiek up a hell of a row.

BERNNAN SENT ME WORD.

Pil have to no upstairs for a while until after they're gone, and my room "Il have to be fixed up." Soom after that the men went into the Boss! room and took up the carpet, and carried all the furniture away; then they put up an old bed, and put some other things into the room. When the jury came up the Commissioners and warden Fox were with them. They looked at the lower part of the Pentientiary first, and when they got into Tweed's real room they were told that it was siept in by keepers. Of course you know they found Tweed in a fittle room partitioned off from the nospital. There was a window and a bad smell in the room. There's always a bad simell from a to-spital. The arr all came from the hospital, for the jartition don't reach up more than eight or ten feet. Well the jarymen saw the old man' up in that roum looking kind o' saa, and so they thought that it was his regular room. I nearly warden Fox say:—Now you see the magnificent apartiment of Mr. Tweed that the newshapers talk adont so much.' He said some more, but in the united war, the presence all thought he siept in it."

The other actors in this continuous play are the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, the Warden of the Penttentiary, and, in a small part, one other inimate of the hospital and Penttentiary, who plays the part of the "working orderly" under Mr. Tweed.

Ever since the play began on Blackwell's Island the public in New York have been receiving rundors of it. It puzzled everybody, and very lew persons gained a knowledge of its character. And the lew who did get to anderstand it kept their mouths very lightly shut. Whenever report said anything very near the truth some officials connected with the Penitentiary refuted it, and with a great show

Comptroller Green (dryly)—The clerks of the Subreme Court could not walt twelve hours for their pay twelve weeks ago, and I think that their wants were by no means so pressing as the wants of these chartagic institutions; and yet the Mayor thinks that they can walt twenty-four hours.

Commissioner Baker followed in a written speech, in which he attacked the teaching of German in the schools upon its merits. He opposed the revised course of instruction as making too great a demand upon the teachers, and leaving too little time for other and more important studies. He thought the German language, however important it might be, had not been nationalized, and argued that the purposes of our public schools should be to Americanize the children of foreign parents in this country—to Americanize Germans and not Germanize Americans. He referred to the advantages to be derived from a knowledge of the language in this country and insisted that they were not such as to make it of general inflity, and therefore essential in our schools.

Commissioner Elamoth, in response, said German had been taught in our schools for twenty years, and was originally the outgrowth of a popular demand. He regarded the question in its educational aspect, from a practical point of view and in its effects upon the German children, who, he insisted, were Americanized by an attendance upon the public schools, from which they would be withdrawn if their native language was not taught, and be sent to exclusively German schools.

An extended discussion jojiowed, in which commissioner Herring snowed that there were but twenty study hours in the week, and that in devoting two hours of each week to German, more time was given to it than to any of the English branches. He insisted that the teachers were but twenty study hours in the week, and that in devoting two hours of each week to German chools.
